

United States v. Flores-Montano

Supreme Court of the United States

February 25, 2004, Argued ; March 30, 2004, Decided

No. 02-1794

Reporter

541 U.S. 149 *; 124 S. Ct. 1582 ; 158 L. Ed. 2d 311 ; 2004 U.S. LEXIS 2548 *; 72 U.S.L.W. 4263; 17 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 207

UNITED STATES, Petitioner v. MANUEL FLORES-MONTANO

Subsequent History: [*1]

On remand at, Remanded by United States v. Flores-Montano, 377 F.3d 1105, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 15999 (9th Cir., Aug. 4, 2004)

Prior History: ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT.

United States v. Flores-Montano, 540 U.S. 1043, 157 L. Ed. 2d 690, 124 S. Ct. 861, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 8560 (U.S., 2003)

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

gas tank, border, reasonable suspicion, searches, disassembly, reassembly, routine, fuel tank, customs, border search, drilling, privacy, international border, inspection, marijuana, vehicles, removal, station

Case Summary

Procedural Posture

Customs officials seized 37 kilograms of marijuana from defendant's gas tank at the international border. A grand jury indicted defendant of unlawfully importing marijuana and of possession of marijuana with intent to distribute. Defendant moved to suppress the marijuana. The district court granted the motion. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari.

Overview

The appellate court held that the Fourth Amendment forbade the fuel tank search absent reasonable suspicion. The Supreme Court found that complex balancing tests to determine what was a "routine" search of a vehicle, as opposed to a more "intrusive" search of a person, had no place in border searches of vehicles. Searches made at the border were reasonable simply by virtue of the fact that they occurred at the border. It was difficult to imagine how the search of a gas tank, which should have been solely a repository for fuel, could have been more of an invasion of privacy than the search of the automobile's passenger compartment. A gas tank search involved a brief procedure that could have been reversed without damaging the safety or operation of the vehicle. While the interference with a motorist's possessory interest was not insignificant when the United States removed, disassembled, and reassembled his gas tank, it nevertheless was justified by the United States' paramount interest in protecting the border. The United States' authority to conduct suspicionless inspections at the border included the authority to remove, disassemble, and reassemble a vehicle's fuel tank.

property crossing into the United States, are reasonable simply by virtue of the fact that they occur at the border.

Outcome

The judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings.

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

HN1 [↓] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

Complex balancing tests to determine what is a "routine" search of a vehicle, as opposed to a more "intrusive" search of a person, have no place in border searches of vehicles.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

HN2 [↓] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

The United States' interest in preventing the entry of unwanted persons and effects is at its zenith at the international border. Searches made at the border, pursuant to the longstanding right of the sovereign to protect itself by stopping and examining persons and

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

Governments > Federal Government > Domestic Security

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Search Warrants > General Overview

HN3 [↓] Warrantless Searches, Border Searches

Congress has granted the executive plenary authority to conduct routine searches and seizures at the border, without probable cause or a warrant, in order to regulate the collection of duties and to prevent the introduction of contraband into the United States.

Governments > Federal Government > Domestic Security

HN4 [↓] Federal Government, Domestic Security

It is axiomatic that the United States, as sovereign, has the inherent authority to protect, and a paramount interest in protecting, its territorial integrity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

HN5 [↓] Warrantless Searches, Border Searches

See 19 U.S.C.S. § 1581\(a\).

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Expectation of Privacy

HN6 [↓] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

The expectation of privacy is less at the border than it is in the interior.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Warrantless Searches > Vehicle Searches > General Overview

HN7 [↓] Warrantless Searches, Border Searches

Automobiles seeking entry into the United States may be searched.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > Nonpossessory & Possessory Interests

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Warrantless Searches > Vehicle Searches > General Overview

HN8 [↓] Warrantless Searches, Border Searches

While the interference with a motorist's possessory interest is not insignificant when the United States removes, disassembles, and reassembles his gas tank, it nevertheless is justified by the United States' paramount interest in protecting the border.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Warrantless Searches > Border Searches

HN9 [↓] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

The United States' authority to conduct suspicionless inspections at the border includes the authority to remove, disassemble, and reassemble a vehicle's fuel tank.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Decision

[311] Federal Government's authority, under Federal Constitution's Fourth Amendment, to conduct suspicionless inspections at international border held to include authority to remove, disassemble, and reassemble motor vehicle's fuel tank.

Summary

An individual, while driving a station wagon, attempted to enter the United States at an international-border port of entry in southern California. A United States customs inspector conducted an inspection of the station wagon and requested the individual to leave the vehicle.

The station wagon was then taken to a secondary inspection station, where another inspector and a mechanic (1) disassembled the gas tank; (2) found inside a substantial amount of marijuana, which was seized; and (3) reassembled the gas tank. The entire process, including some time to wait for the mechanic to arrive, reportedly took about an hour.

A federal grand jury indicted the individual on some federal drug charges. The individual--relying on a United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit precedent to the effect that the removal of a gas tank required reasonable suspicion, in order to be consistent with the Federal Constitution's Fourth Amendment--filed a motion to suppress the marijuana recovered from the station wagon's gas tank. When the Federal Government advised the United States District Court for the Southern District of California that the government was not relying on reasonable suspicion as a basis for opposing the motion--as the government believed that the Court of Appeals precedent had been wrongly decided--the District Court relied on this precedent and granted the suppression motion. In turn, the Court of Appeals, citing the same precedent, summarily affirmed the District Court's judgment.

[*312] On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Rehnquist, Ch. J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that:

(1) In view of the Federal Government's "paramount" interest in protecting the nation's borders, the Federal Government's authority, under the Fourth Amendment, to conduct suspicionless inspections at the international border included the authority to remove, disassemble, and reassemble a motor vehicle's fuel tank.

(2) While some searches of property might be so destructive as to require a different result, the search in question was not one of them.

Breyer, J., concurring, expressed the view that an existing administrative process--which kept track of border searches, including the reasons for the searches--ought to help minimize concerns that gas-tank searches might be undertaken in an abusive manner.

Headnotes

SEARCH AND SEIZURE §10.5 > -- at border -- motor vehicle -- removal, disassembly, and reassembly of fuel tank > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#) [1A] [LEdHN\[1B\]](#)
[\[1B\]LEdHN\[1C\]](#) [1C] [LEdHN\[1D\]](#)
[\[1D\]LEdHN\[1E\]](#) [1E]

With respect to an accused who was indicted on federal drug charges after United States customs personnel, at the international border, had found and seized a substantial amount of marijuana from the gas tank of a station wagon which the accused had been driving, the Federal Government's authority, under the Federal Constitution's Fourth Amendment, to conduct suspicionless inspections at the international border included the authority to remove, disassemble, and reassemble a motor vehicle's fuel tank--and while some searches of property might be so destructive as to require a different result, the search in question was not one of them--as:

(1) The statute (19 USCS § 1581\(a\)) that authorized the search in the case at hand reflected the impressive historical pedigree of the Federal Government's power and interest in protecting the nation's borders.

(2) This interest was illustrated, in the case at hand, by evidence that smugglers frequently attempted to penetrate the nation's borders with contraband secreted in their automobiles' fuel tanks.

(3) With respect to the accused's asserted privacy interest, (a) on many occasions, the United States Supreme Court had noted that the expectation of privacy was less at the border than it was in the interior; and (b) it was difficult to imagine how the search of an automobile's gas tank, which ought to be solely a repository for fuel, could be more of an invasion of privacy than a search of the automobile's passenger compartment.

(4) While the interference with a motorist's possessory interest was not insignificant when the Federal Government removed, disassembled, and reassembled a gas tank, this interference was justified by the Federal Government's paramount interest in protecting the border, where (a) the accused did not--and on the record could not--truly contend that in the case at hand, or in [313] any other case, such a fuel-tank procedure had resulted in serious damage to, or destruction of, the property; and (b) if damage to a vehicle were to occur, then a motorist might be entitled to recovery.

(5) While the accused argued that that he had some sort of Fourth Amendment right not to be subject to delay, (a) the accused pointed to no cases indicating the Fourth Amendment shielded entrants from inconvenience or delay at the international border; (b) the procedure in the case at hand reportedly had taken about an hour, including some time to wait for a mechanic; (c) the Federal Government had advised the Supreme Court that depending on the type of car, a search involving the disassembly and reassembly of a gas tank might take 1 to 2 hours; and (d) delays of 1 to 2 hours at international borders were to be expected.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE §10.5 > -- at border -- persons -- vehicles > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[2\]](#) [2]

With respect to border searches, the reasons that might support a requirement, under the Federal Constitution's Fourth Amendment, of some level of suspicion in the case of highly intrusive searches of the person--reasons such as dignity and privacy interests of the person being searched--do not carry over to motor vehicles. Thus, complex balancing tests to determine what is a "routine" search of a vehicle, as opposed to a more "intrusive" search of a person, have no place in border searches of vehicles.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE §10.5 > -- at border > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[3\]](#) [3]

For purposes of analysis under the Federal Constitution's Fourth Amendment guarantee against unreasonable searches and seizures, the Federal Government's interest in preventing the entry of unwanted persons and effects is at its zenith at the international border.

UNITED STATES §59 > -- protecting territorial integrity > Headnote:

[LEdHN\[4\]](#) [4]

The United States, as sovereign, has the inherent authority to protect, and a paramount interest in protecting, its territorial integrity. [314]

Syllabus

At the international border in southern California, customs officials seized 37 kilograms of marijuana from respondent's gas tank by removing and disassembling the tank. After respondent was indicted on federal drug charges, he moved to suppress the drugs recovered from the gas tank, relying on a Ninth Circuit panel decision holding that a gas tank's removal requires reasonable suspicion under the Fourth Amendment. The District Court granted the motion, and the Ninth Circuit [*2] summarily affirmed.

Held:

The search did not require reasonable suspicion. In the decision relied on below, the Ninth Circuit panel seized on language from United States v. Montoya de Hernandez, 473 U.S. 531, 538, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304, that used "routine" as a descriptive term in discussing border searches. The panel took "routine," fashioned a new balancing test, and extended it to vehicle searches. But the reasons that might support a suspicion requirement in the case of highly intrusive searches of persons simply do not carry over to vehicles. Complex balancing tests to determine what is a "routine" vehicle search, as opposed to a more "intrusive" search of a person, have no place in border searches of vehicles. The Government's interest in preventing the entry of unwanted persons and effects is at its zenith at the international border. United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606, 616, 52 L. Ed. 2d 617, 97 S. Ct. 1972. Congress has always granted the Executive plenary authority to conduct routine searches and seizures at the border, without probable cause or a warrant, in order to regulate the collection of duties and [*3] to prevent the introduction of contraband into this country. Montoya de Hernandez, supra, at 537, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304. Respondent's assertion that he has a privacy interest in his fuel tank, and that the suspicionless disassembly of his tank is an invasion of his privacy, is rejected, as the privacy expectation is less at the border than it is in the interior, id., at 538, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304, and this Court has long recognized that automobiles seeking entry into this country may be searched, see Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 154, 69 L. Ed. 543, 45 S. Ct. 280, Treas. Dec. Int. Rev. 3686. And while the Fourth Amendment "protects property as well as privacy," Soldal v. Cook County, 506 U.S. 56, 62, 121 L. Ed. 2d 450, 113 S. Ct. 538, the interference with a motorist's possessory interest in his gas tank is justified by the Government's paramount interest in protecting the border. Thus, the Government's authority to conduct suspicionless inspections at the border includes the authority to remove, disassemble, and reassemble a vehicle's fuel tank.

Reversed and remanded.

Counsel: Lisa S. Blatt [*4] argued the cause for petitioner.

Steven F. Hubachek argued the cause for respondent.

Judges: Rehnquist, C. J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court. Breyer, J., filed a concurring opinion.

Opinion by: REHNQUIST

Opinion

[*150] [1584] Chief Justice Rehnquist delivered the opinion of the Court.

[LEdHN\[1A\]](#)^[↑] [1A] Customs officials seized 37

kilograms--a little more than 81 pounds--of marijuana from respondent Manuel Flores-Montano's gas tank at the international border. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, relying on an earlier decision by a divided panel of that court, United States v. Molina-Tarazon, 279 F.3d 709 \(2002\), held that the Fourth Amendment forbade the fuel tank search absent reasonable suspicion. No. 02-50306, 2003 WL 22410705 (Mar. 14, 2003). We hold that the search in question did not require reasonable suspicion.

Respondent, driving a 1987 Ford Taurus station wagon, attempted to enter the United States at the Otay Mesa Port of Entry in southern California. A customs inspector conducted an inspection of the station wagon, and requested respondent to [*5] leave the vehicle. The vehicle was then taken to a secondary inspection station.

[*151] At the secondary station, a second customs inspector inspected the gas tank by tapping it, and noted that the tank sounded solid. Subsequently, the inspector requested a mechanic under contract with Customs to come to the border station to remove the tank. Within 20 to 30 minutes, the mechanic arrived. He raised the car on a hydraulic lift, loosened the straps and unscrewed the bolts holding the gas tank to the undercarriage of the vehicle, and then disconnected some hoses and electrical connections. After the gas tank was removed, the inspector hammered off bondo (a putty-like hardening substance that is used to seal openings) from the top of the gas tank. The inspector opened an access plate underneath the bondo and found 37 kilograms of marijuana bricks. The process took 15 to 25 minutes.

A grand jury for the Southern District of California indicted respondent on one count of unlawfully importing marijuana, in violation of [21 U.S.C. § 952 \[21 USCS § 952\]](#), and one count of possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, in violation [*6] of § 841(a)(1).

Relying on Molina-Tarazon, respondent filed a motion to suppress the marijuana recovered from the gas tank. In Molina-Tarazon, a divided panel of the Court of Appeals held, inter alia, that removal of a gas tank requires reasonable suspicion in order to be consistent with the Fourth Amendment. 279 F.3d, at 717.

The Government advised the District Court that it was not relying on reasonable [1585] suspicion as a basis for denying respondent's suppression motion, but that it believed Molina-Tarazon was wrongly decided. The District Court, relying on Molina-Tarazon, held that reasonable suspicion [316] was required to justify the search and, accordingly, granted respondent's motion to suppress. The Court of Appeals, citing Molina-Tarazon, summarily affirmed the District Court's judgment. No. 02-50306, 2003 WL 22410705 \(CA9, Mar. 14, 2003\). We granted certiorari, 540 U.S. ___, 540 U.S. 945, 157 L. Ed. 2d 274, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 7435, 124 S. Ct. 385 (2003), and now reverse.

[*152] In Molina-Tarazon, the Court of Appeals decided a case presenting similar facts to the one at bar. It [*7] asked "whether [the removal and dismantling of the defendant's fuel tank] is a 'routine' border search for which no suspicion whatsoever is required." 279 F.3d, at 711. The Court of Appeals stated that "[i]n order to conduct a search that goes beyond the routine, an inspector must have reasonable suspicion," and the "critical factor" in determining whether a search is "routine" is the "degree of intrusiveness." Id., at 712-713.

[LEdHN\[2\]\[↑\]](#) [2] The Court of Appeals seized on language from our opinion in United States v. Montoya de Hernandez, 473 U.S. 531, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304 \(1985\), in which we used the word "routine" as a descriptive term in discussing border searches. Id., 473 U.S. at 538, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304 ("Routine searches of the persons and effects of entrants are not subject to any requirement of reasonable suspicion, probable cause, or warrant"); id., at 541, n. 4, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304 ("Because the issues are not presented today we suggest no view on what level of suspicion, if any, is required for nonroutine border searches such [*8] as strip, body-cavity, or involuntary x-ray searches"). The Court of Appeals took the term "routine," fashioned a new balancing test, and extended it to searches of vehicles. But the reasons that might support a requirement of some level of suspicion in the case of highly intrusive searches of the person--dignity and privacy interests of the person being searched--simply do not carry over to vehicles. HN1[↑] Complex balancing tests to determine what is a "routine" search of a vehicle, as opposed to a more "intrusive" search of a person, have no place in border searches of vehicles.

LEdHN[1B][↑] [1B] LEdHN[3][↑] [3] LEdHN[4][↑] [4] HN2[↑] The Government's interest in preventing the entry of unwanted persons and effects is at its zenith at the international border. Time and again, we have stated that "searches made at the border, pursuant to the longstanding right of the sovereign to protect itself by stopping and examining persons and property crossing into this country, are reasonable simply by virtue of the fact that they occur at the [*153] border." [*9] United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606, 616, 52 L. Ed. 2d 617, 97 S. Ct. 1972 (1977). HN3[↑] Congress, since the beginning of our Government, "has granted the Executive plenary authority to conduct routine searches and seizures at the border, without probable cause or a warrant, in order to regulate the collection of duties and to prevent the introduction of contraband into this country." United States v. Montoya de Hernandez, 473 U.S. 531, 537, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304 (citing Ramsey, supra, at 616-617, 52 L. Ed. 2d 617, 97 S. Ct. 1972 (citing Act of July 31, 1789, ch 5, 1 Stat 29)). The modern statute that authorized the search in this case, 46 Stat 747, 19 U.S.C. § 1581(a)/19 USCS § 1581(a),¹ derived from a [317] statute passed [1586] by the First Congress, the Act of Aug. 4, 1790, ch 35, § 31, 1 Stat 164, see United States v. Villamonte-Marquez, 462 U.S. 579, 584, 77 L. Ed. 2d 22, 103 S. Ct. 2573 (1983), and reflects the "impressive historical pedigree" of the Government's power and interest, [*10] id., at 585, 77 L. Ed. 2d 22, 103 S. Ct. 2573. HN4[↑] It is axiomatic that the United States, as sovereign, has the inherent authority to protect, and a paramount interest in protecting, its territorial integrity.

LEdHN[1C][↑] [1C] That interest in protecting the borders is illustrated in this case by the evidence that smugglers frequently attempt to penetrate our borders with contraband secreted in their automobiles' fuel tank. Over the past 5 1/2 fiscal years, there have been 18,788 vehicle drug seizures at the southern California ports of entry. App. to Pet. for Cert. 12a. Of those 18,788, gas tank drug seizures have accounted for 4,619 of the vehicle drug seizures, or approximately 25%. Ibid. In addition, instances of persons smuggled in and around gas tank compartments are discovered at the ports of entry of [*154] San Ysidro and Otay Mesa at a rate averaging 1 approximately every 10 days. Id., at 16a.

Respondent asserts two main arguments with

¹ Section 1581\(a\) provides:

HN5[↑] "Any officer of the customs may at any time go on board of any vessel or vehicle at any place in the United States or within the customs waters or, as he may be authorized, within a customs-enforcement area established under the Anti-

Smuggling Act, or at any other authorized place, without as well as within his district, and examine the manifest and other documents and papers and examine, inspect, and search the vessel or vehicle and every part thereof and any person, trunk, package, or cargo on board, and to this end may hail and stop such vessel or vehicle, and use all necessary force to compel compliance."

respect to his Fourth Amendment interests. First, he urges that he has a privacy interest in his fuel tank, and that the suspicionless disassembly of his tank is an invasion of his privacy. But on many occasions, we have noted that HN6^[↑] the expectation of privacy is less at the border than it is in the interior. [\[*12\]](#) Montoya de Hernandez, supra, at 538, 87 L. Ed. 2d 381, 105 S. Ct. 3304. We have long recognized that HN7^[↑] automobiles seeking entry into this country may be searched. See Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 154, 69 L. Ed. 543, 45 S. Ct. 280, Treas. Dec. Int. Rev. 3686 \(1925\) ("Travellers may be so stopped in crossing an international boundary because of national self protection reasonably requiring one entering the country to identify himself as entitled to come in, and his belongings as effects which may be lawfully brought in"). It is difficult to imagine how the search of a gas tank, which should be solely a repository for fuel, could be more of an invasion of privacy than the search of the automobile's passenger compartment.

Second, respondent argues that the Fourth Amendment "protects property as well as privacy," Soldal v. Cook County, 506 U.S. 56, 62, 121 L. Ed. 2d 450, 113 S. Ct. 538 \(1992\), and that the disassembly and reassembly of his gas tank is a significant deprivation of his property interest because it may damage the vehicle. He does not, and on the record cannot, truly contend that the procedure of removal, disassembly, and reassembly [\[*13\]](#) of the fuel tank in this case or any other has resulted in serious damage to, or destruction of, the [\[318\]](#) property. ² According to [\[*155\]](#) the Government, [\[1587\]](#) for example, in fiscal year 2003, 348 gas tank searches conducted along the southern border were negative (i.e., no contraband was found), the gas tanks were reassembled, and the vehicles continued their entry into the United States without incident. Brief for United States 31.

[\[*14\]](#) LEdHN1D^[↑] [1D] Respondent cites not a single accident involving the vehicle or motorist in the many thousands of gas tank disassemblies that have occurred at the border. A gas tank search involves a brief procedure that can be reversed without damaging the safety or operation of the vehicle. If damage to a vehicle were to occur, the motorist might be entitled to recovery. See, e.g., [31 U.S.C. § 3723 \[31 USCS § 3723\]](#); [19 U.S.C. § 1630 \[19 USCS § 1630\]](#). HN8^[↑] While the interference with a motorist's possessory interest is not insignificant when the Government removes, disassembles, and reassembles his gas tank, it nevertheless is justified by the Government's paramount interest in protecting the border. ³

13, 52 L. Ed. 2d 617, 97 S. Ct. 1972 \(1977\).

² Respondent's reliance on cases involving exploratory drilling searches is misplaced. See United States v. Rivas, 157 F.3d 364 \(CA5 1998\) (drilling into body of trailer required reasonable suspicion); United States v. Robles, 45 F.3d 1 \(CA1 1995\) (drilling into machine part required reasonable suspicion); United States v. Carreon, 872 F.2d 1436 \(CA10 1989\) (drilling into camper required reasonable suspicion). We have no reason at this time to pass on the reasonableness of drilling, but simply note the obvious factual difference that this case involves the procedure of removal, disassembly, and reassembly of a fuel tank, rather than potentially destructive drilling. We again leave open the question "whether, and under what circumstances, a border search might be deemed 'unreasonable' because of the particularly offensive manner it is carried out." United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606, 618, n.

³ LEdHN1E^[↑] [1E] Respondent also argued that he has some sort of Fourth Amendment right not to be subject to delay at the international border and that the need for the use of specialized labor, as well as the hour actual delay here and the potential for even greater delay for reassembly are an invasion of that right. Respondent points to no cases indicating the Fourth Amendment shields entrants from inconvenience or delay at the international border.

The procedure in this case took about an hour (including the wait for the mechanic). At oral argument, the Government advised us that, depending on the type of car, a search involving the disassembly and reassembly of a gas tank may take one to two hours. Tr. of Oral Arg. 10. We think it clear that delays of one to two hours at international borders are to be expected.

[*15] For the reasons stated, we conclude that HN9] the Government's authority to conduct suspicionless inspections at the border includes the authority to remove, disassemble, and reassemble a vehicle's fuel tank. While it may be true that some [*156] searches of property are so destructive as to require a different result, this was not one of them. The judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit is therefore reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: Breyer

Concur

Justice Breyer, concurring.

I join the Court's opinion in full. I also note that Customs keeps track of the border searches its agents conduct, including the reasons for the searches. Tr. of Oral Arg. 53-54. This administrative process should help minimize concerns that gas tank searches might be undertaken in an abusive manner.

References

[68 Am Jur 2d, Searches and Seizures §§ 53 \[*16\] -57](#)

USCS, Constitution, Amendment 4

L Ed Digest, Search and Seizure § 10.5

L Ed Index, Border Patrols or Searches; Gas Tanks

Annotation References

Validity, under Federal Constitution, of warrantless search of motor vehicle--Supreme Court cases. 142 L Ed 2d 993.

Supreme Court's views as to the federal legal aspects of the right of privacy. 43 L Ed 2d 871.

Who may conduct border search pursuant to 19 USCS §§ 482, 1401\(i\), 1581\(a, b\) and 1582. 61 ALR Fed 290.

Validity of border searches and seizures by customs officers. 6 ALR Fed 317.

Destruction of property as violation of Fourth Amendment. 98 ALR5th 305.

End of Document